The S&P 500 Dividend Aristocrats Index is designed to measure the performance of S&P 500 Index constituents that have followed a policy of consistently increasing dividends every year for at least 25 consecutive years.

The Barclays Capital Aggregate Bond Index is an index that measures the performance of U.S. investment grade bonds. An index is unmanaged, and investments cannot be made directly into an index.

Prior to June 30, 2006, the Fund was named Thrivent High Yield Fund II and invested primarily in high-risk, high-yield securities, commonly referred to as "junk bonds." On June 30, 2006, the Fund adopted its current name and its current investment strategy, which includes the ability to invest in a more diversified portfolio of income-producing securities, including dividend-producing equities, real estate investment trust (REIT) stocks and other income-producing securities.

Risks: The Fund may invest in debt or equity securities. Debt securities include high-yield, high-risk securities commonly known as "junk bonds." High-yield securities are subject to greater price fluctuations and increased risk of loss of principal than investment-grade bonds. Equity securities include securities of REITs, which are subject to the risk that changes in real estate values or economic downturns can have a negative effect on issuers in the real estate industry. A portion of this distribution may be reclassified as either a capital gain or a return of capital once the fund receives reallocation percentages from the Fund's underlying REIT holdings after the end of the calendar year. As a result the 30 day distribution yield would be lower. The securities in the Fund's portfolio are also subject to market risk, which is the risk that security prices may decline over a period of time, and interest rate risk, which is the risk that security prices may be adversely affected by changes in interest rates. These and other risks are described in the Fund's prospectus.
